ABSTRACT

This directory was compiled in partial fulfillment of one of the Educational Services Committee's main objectives: to assist Edison Electric Institute (EEI) member companies to initiate, expand, and evaluate their educational activities. The publication contains three main parts. The first is a statement of guidelines for educational programs at utility companies which the Committee strongly endorses. The second is an alphabetical listing of member companies (with complete addresses) and their principal educational representatives. In addition, nuclear information/education centers are listed to encourage the exchange of energy resources. The third part displays, in matrix form, those features which are included in educational programs available through members companies. These features include audio-visual materials, curriculum materials, educational services, and cooperative programs. This part is designed to facilitate the interchange of information on overall programs or on specific features of those programs. (Author/JN)

INTRODUCTION

This Directory was compiled by the Educational Services Section of the Edison Electric Institute with the direction and cooperation of the Educational Services Committee. It was published in partial fulfillment of one of the Committee's main objectives: to assist EEI member companies to initiate, expand and evaluate their educational activities.

For your convenience, this publication contains three main sections. The first is a statement of guidelines for educational programs which the Committee strongly endorses. The second is an alphabetical listing of member companies and their principal educational representatives. In addition, nuclear information/education centers are listed to encourage the exchange of energy resources. The third section displays in matrix form, those features which are included in educational programs available through member companies. This section is designed to facilitate the interchange of information on overall programs or on specific features of those programs.

The Educational Services Committee urges that Directory users recommend ways to make this resource better serve the needs of member companies.

EDUCATIONAL SERVICES COMMITTEE

GUIDELINES FOR THE PRODUCTION, DISTRIBUTION, AND USE OF SCHOOL MATERIALS, PROGRAMS, AND ACTIVITIES

In order that programs, materials, and activities produced for schools by business, industry and community agencies be of the highest quality and maximum effectiveness, we endorse the following guidelines and further urge their adoption by all EEI member companies.

General Considerations

Worthwhile and effective energy education programs, activities and materials:

- have clearly stated goals and objectives stated in terms of expected student learning
- treat controversial issues fairly and honestly and do not advocate any one particular point of view
- are concerned with helping students learn how to think, not what to think
- clearly identify opinion and corporate policy (if included)
- are not used to sell products, policies or political points of view
- are sensitive to human values and avoid racial, sexual, occupational, regional, political, handicapped and other stereotypes

Design and Production of Materials

Better, more usable educational programs and materials result when:

- clearly stated and measurable goals and objectives are established early in the developmental process
- those who will be using the materials—students, teachers, administrators—are involved in the process
- they are designed to mesh with ongoing educational activities and are compatible with adopted courses of study, and state curriculum guidelines
- provision is made for student-teacher creativity and innovation
- they are targeted to specific grade levels and subject matter areas
- consideration is given to the physical design and packaging of materials so that they are attractive and convenient to use

Program Implementation

An effective implementation plan is needed if educational programs and materials are to be of maximum effectiveness. A good implementation plan:

- makes use of the services available from professional associations, teacher training institutions, staff development centers, county offices of education, the State Department of Education, publishers and other related agencies
- includes provision for the instruction for those who will be using the materials

Evaluation

The value of all programs and materials is determined by their effectiveness with students. Evaluation is therefore a key program element, and should provide for:

- field testing and evaluation of all programs and materials in terms of stated goals and objectives by students and teachers prior to wide-scale implementation
- provision for continuous feedback and modification as needed after the program is underway
- test instruments and evaluation suggestions for teacher use in the classroom

The committee gratefully acknowledges the contribution of the California Energy Education Forum in the development of these guidelines.
